"Farewell all, if friendship ceases!"

Mary, known in the athletic world as "Brad," is a wonderful mixture that keeps us all guessing. She came to us a little girl with a Dutch cut and an infectious giggle. She soon developed a tendency to break high-jumping records and to find the way straight to our affections. We could hardly put it in words, but there is a certain healthy light-heartedness about Brad that somehow seems to typify the spirit of early sunshine. There are very few of us who have not been brought out of a fit of the blues by her mere presence or who have not been cheered by her philosophy that the morrow will take care of itself. To all she has been completely loyal and the most generous of comrades.

"Crash, bang, crash" (or what have you?), and Ted Lewis, Lon Chaney and Spring are entering the room in the shape of Gertie! You can still recognize her through the tangled mop of hair and in spite of bandaged legs and sunburned arms. Recognize her? Can we forget her for a moment? Whether serious or fooling, Gertie at once draws you into her mood and carries you along. You never realize her sensitive nature until you go to her with your latest trouble, and once having done this you are sure to go again. Gertie will always be remembered in the middle of a mob, moving them to gales of laughter or profound meditation as she wills.

JANE SHATTUCK CONNER

Vassar

RYE, N. Y.

She is the hardest person in the world to write about, for anything we say in praise of her becomes an inadequate remark, and in merely writing that she has "tact, sympathy and character," we are so far from what she really has, that it becomes the usual trite description. For she is not a trite person—there is no explanation for her, no reason why we always want to laugh when she does, why algebra remains an unsolved mystery to her, and why she has all the attributes of a school president and is blessed, moreover, not only with broad-mindedness but also an irresistible sense of humor. No one can be so impressive when she chooses, and no one can become so delightfully whimsical and completely abandoned over either an ice-cream cone or swimming. She is inimitable.

Chairman of the library committee! Why bring that up? Even though we know Ery hates to have it mentioned, still we have to, because she did it so well, just as she did everything else: prefect, advisory board member and, hardest of all, an ideal roommate. Well deserved was that vote which elected her the most tactful, for she had one roommate who spent the day doing things she shouldn't and another who spent the night behaving equally badly, yet she managed them perfectly. Only her sense of humor, firm will and calm disposition, aided by her tact, could have enabled Room Two to go through as one of the few rooms where there were few upsets during the year. Cheerful with companions, fair to her enemies, kind to everyone, she is a charming friend.

HELEN ELIZABETH CROSBY

RHINEBECK, N. Y.

Enveloped in a sheepskin coat, an immense beret on the back of her head, Peter, looking like a large edition of Christopher Robin, may often be seen strolling through the rain, unconcernedly reciting poetry. Her proficiency and talent in this field is a source of continual astonishment to the rest of the school. Possessed of both dramatic talent and executive ability, she has written club plays, directed parties, and acted ably in the Dramatic Club Play. Besides these impressive qualities, her excellence in track has always been an aid to the Dials. Her refreshing sense of proportion and genuineness makes her generally respected and admired.

RUTH RANKIN CROSSETT

Entered 1927 Bryn Mawr

Flying books, pillows, and lampshades are hurtling over the banister and roars of laughter issue from Space. Ruthie is cutting capers in her latest version of the "hula"! Where she finds her even disposition, surrounded by four irascible roommates, is one of those unanswered questions of Cluett. Even when thousands are tearing from her back the lost possessions of months, Ruthie remains calm and unruffled and in a tone not in the least angry but just "dreadfully, dreadfully hurt," says, "oh, are these yours?" She is one of those annoying individuals who after merely glancing at the cover of a book comes forth with an eighty. Altogether she's a "lovely girl" and a Cluett Senior who is always wanted wherever she goes.

KATHERINE BRADLEE DAVIS

Although Kay has been here only two years, yet a distinct vacancy will be felt in the school when she leaves. She has proved herself a wellnigh ideal prefect. Exacting of herself, she is able to regard other people's deficiencies with an excusing sense of humor, even while she manages them. She quietly sets her own standards and lives up to them with imperturbable steadfastness. Her true merit has been recognized and, as a result, she was exempted from all rules—the greatest honor the school can give. Kay is an ardent tennis player and has managed this branch of the Sun's athletics very efficiently. No one has a more enviable reputation, for her unselfishness and sweetness and many accomplishments are

Boots, who can solve any problem and do it correctly, has a mind which puzzles all Cluett. HOW she does it, and everything else besides, is a subject for endless discussion. Not only is she always one of the best in every sport, but she rivals her proficiency in athletics with academic credits in studies. A more familiar and a less fearful side, however, is her capacity for eating at the training table, her enormous correspondence, the sound of her giggle (or Miss Neel teasing her) and her murmured "one, two, three," as we go into chapel. For although she is a bewildering paragon, she hides her accomplishments whenever possible, and is as ready for the noises of Space as the silence of study hall.

Sivvie, while being an indispensable president of the riding-club, was also an indispensable member of Cluett. No one ever went to her end of the hall without keeping on, irresistibly attracted, to her room, where were horse and dog etchings, orange vases of flowers, and photographs of cherished sailboats. And once in her room, we were loath to leave it, for Kay and Sivvie gave it a cheerful, hospitable personality. Besides, Sivvie's "Weawie River" were words that we could not afford to miss! What will Gymkhana be without her splendid jumping and her humorous smile at the onlookers? Hereafter, we shall search for a reminder of both in the Spur, or the Sportsman, no one being a better sportswoman than she will be.

Gertie's nature is enticingly complex. There is the Gertie of school life, absorbed in her work, the limitless persistence she shows in everything she does always bringing her out on top. There is the gay young person of the holidays who enthralls us afterwards by tales of good times. There is the woman of the world who humbles us all by her manner, vast intelligence and her ability to talk to other people. There is the Gertie of the future, surrounded by a golden haze of Indian splendor. But the Gertie we will always remember is one who is generous in criticism of others and quietly faithful to her own high ideals.

No one can describe Jan in all her beauty, for she does not seem to be a part of this world. Whether in the gym or at the piano, she gives the impression that she dropped in by mistake and will soon be gone. No one can guess what she has just been doing or what she will be doing next—whether dreaming or dancing. Perhaps you will hear her play the piano and be given a trip to Fairyland, or perhaps you will hear her sing and be seized with a foolish desire to weep, for Jan is a rare mixture of the real and the spiritual, each taking its turn in the ascendancy.

A great yell from the benches, frenzied tones urging hoarse throats to bigger and better efforts, and one knows it is Ivy, desperately struggling to keep her beret perched on her head, and at the same time lead the howling mob in a concentrated cheer. Besides this great faculty for cheerleading she is unsurpassed in harmonizing with Sue or tossing the basketball straight for a goal. No matter what Ivy attempts, she does it with all her heart and soul and usually wins. And she tackles the most difficult tasks with the same giggle with which she enters the cold shower. No one could have been more deserving of the new cup given by Ghita Watson for the "greatest progress in athletics." Although she will not always be receiving cups, her reward will come in the realization that she has always succeeded in doing her best.

"I praise your strangely individual, foreign ways."

Leaky is less like a weathervane than most of us who are continually blown about by different influences, since she has set a valuation on things and abides by her estimate. She has saved many of us from boredom in the odd moments before dinner by playing the piano, for her music is real to her and will not, we know, be tossed aside as something that is finished with school days. We will all remember with amusement the odd little accent she still keeps from her years abroad, her sense of humor and her perceptive judgment in all affairs, whether of problems or people.

Can anyone see the two wicker chairs at the head of the stairway in Beaver Brook without remembering Ede sitting there, next to Mrs. Lloyd, checking off galoshes and regaling everyone on their way to bed with fabulous tales of rioting or woe? Her sociability never flagged, nor was there ever too much of it, and she could always be relied upon to corner teachers and successfully inveigle them to a party. Made for good times (witness her vacation the winter term when we were growling through snowstorms), her reminiscent chuckle and warbling, coupled with a gleeful look from her great brown eyes, make leisure spent with her delightful, and working more spontaneous.

ELIZABETH MERRITT LOCKE

Entered 1927 Vassar

96 Round Hill, Northampton, Mass.

To mention the fact that Betty is the "class baby" is a real tribute. There are very few of us who possibly could have graduated so early and so easily, and her slim height often makes us think her much older than she is. She is well informed on all subjects and Room Three will miss the sound of Betty's voice, for after convincing you in a long argument that only one side of a question is permissible to a sane person, she whisks mercilessly to another point of view with entirely new opinions. With all this mental aliveness she combines a growing sweetness and consideration for others. There is nothing hypercritically conservative about her, and it is the new and the interesting which to her seem worth all risks.

PHEBE ANN MATTESON

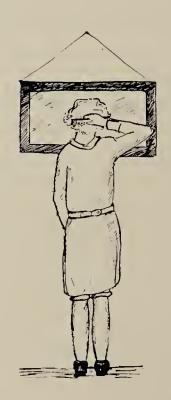

Vassar

SAUNDERSTOWN, R. I.

Ann's expression when she gets up in the morning is one of the joys of Cluett. No matter how languid we are, one look at her consoles us with the fact that she is always twice as sleepy, and we can pride ourselves on being sprightly in comparison. But this lethargy does not last for long! Once she has raced down the hill, scattering clothes to the winds, and once breakfast (the training table size) has been consumed, she discloses her ability for studying and her readiness for athletics. No one is more modest than she who has least cause to be so, for her perseverance and pluck have always been noticed and her smiling geniality has made her unlimited friendships.

Vassar

Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

Eileen is a familiar part of study hall when she sits there fondling her hair (the shortest in existence) or a pencil or anything within reach, reading book after book without casting an eye to her studies. Although seldom out of trouble, she never seems bothered by impending retribution and, supported by a firm belief in the fates, rises out of reach at the crucial moment. Curiosity has given her insight and sympathy, and when one least expects an answer, but most wants one, she replies, often with a touch of true genius. Unlimited ideas keep her in perpetual arguments which no one can disprove because they are so remote from anything ever thought of before. She appears not only in intellectual realms but also in athletic—either way is very much to her credit.

BEULAH PARKER

Entered 1927 Bryn Mawr
570 Park Avenue, New York City

"Hello, coo-coo!" Beu's war cry, though not exactly complimentary, is gleefully answered by all. For whenever Beu appears, the clouds are dispersed, blues go away and the stage is cleared for laughter or argument. A member of Space, Inc., she is generally seen with her four inseparables leading them on into paroxysms of mirth. Although she is never in the same mood for long and is in the depths of despair at still being on the milk list one moment, and is worried over a mere eighty-nine in physics the next, yet one always feels that she is ready to put everything aside to help someone in trouble or to appreciate their good luck.

KATHERINE DOANE PIER

Bryn Mawr

HEWLETT, L. I.

Kay first startled us into recognition of her power of accumulating facts and dispensing them correctly when she shone in Miss Hoyt's English last year. Ever since then we have been properly humbled at her marks, and in exam time all eyes searching the pink slips on the board are apt to pause admiringly before her name. But she has stood before us in other capacities, such as a connoisseur of music, and as a demure member of the Choir in crisp black and white, and lastly as one of those in Dramat. Last year she was the flirtatious but severe mother in "Rosemary," with slim neck and small waist framed in a bodice of lace and a billowy skirt. This year she was the charming heroine of "The Romantic Age," when we were again convinced that her voice and acting are delightful.

If it has been a hot day, you can be sure that Polly will either make you a ghostly visit or theoretically murder her roommates, for so often she has been heard walking in her sleep through dark halls. From this you might gather that Polly is a vague, impractical sort of person, but—"ask Polly!" has been the byword from the first. If it is about uniforms or next Sunday's minister or the latest event in the outside world that we want to know, Polly can tell us. It is also to Polly that we go should we want a cake of soap, a piece of that most precious weekly candy, or much-needed sympathy. You will find books galore in Polly's room, besides, for few of Cluett can boast a reading such as hers.

Grace in the choir, throwing the discus, playing the violin, riding, in Dramat—we could go on forever, because there doesn't seem to be a thing which she cannot do. She is a person of surprises, for every so often she shows us some new ability as she rises to another position. Her good sense supplies her with plans which her perseverance and extraordinary efficiency astonish us by carrying out. Woe to the one who challenges her to an argument, for her confidence in her own ideas, and her power of analysis make her hard to compete with. What can one say to describe Betty when there are so many different sides of her to know? One feels slightly awe stricken in the presence of such a dignified manner, and one also feels that to sound the depths of her mind is comparable to plumbing the unfathomable ocean. Her proficiency in carrying on an intelligent conversation with both old and young is a source of unending amazement to Cluett, while her ability to argue and convince makes one wonder why one was missing when brains were given out.

To us, however, who are given a more intimate view of this astonishing young person, her manner holds no terrors. Only too well do we know her capacity for giggling, borrowing, and hot-water-bottle hurling! We have seen her as completely ridiculous as any of the other Spaceites, and we must say it is one of her moods to which we most delightedly respond, feeling that no fun would be quite complete without Betty in its midst.

"Who took my galoshes?" Fay, in a dense fog, hunting under beds, is meanwhile holding them in her right hand! She is the complete imp who loves to tease and who even in her most serious moments is thinking how bow-legged you are! But although Fay always puts her lighter side forward, those who know her, realize that she has another aspect which only her friends are privileged to see. That is the side which deals with the deeper things of life, such as books and the sea—and icemen! To see Fay dancing, barging up Cluett Hill or, best of all, fixing her hair, is to catch the humor of living, in an instant, and to banish all gloomy thoughts.

MARY CHARLOTTE SWENSON

Entered 1926 Bryn Mawr

Locust, N. J.

She is five feet three and three fourths inches, though she has tried to add to it by a bush of recently cut hair, and she is of very sturdy directness with a most individual and contagious laugh. If you think of Mary as such, and also as one who is able to combine a clever pen with the most businesslike business ability, and the most astounding marks with a passion for horses, you will have a picture of her which, however, does not sufficiently stress her true charm and her true fineness. She is someone who will always stand on her own feet and provide a thorough basis to whatever she undertakes.

Enter Deb, enveloped in a grey coat with a heavy blue sweater tied over her shoulders, flourishing either hockey stick or track shoes, duly accompanied by Jane. When her face has emerged from the pile of wrappings she burrows in, we realize why so many people go to Deb for sympathy and encouragement, for her smile is one of grown up and true understanding. She managed the Dial Club so quietly and surely that it moved as one person wherever she wished it to go, and she wished high. Again and again she drew out the best in individuals and sent them ahead, inspired by her example, to undreamed of accomplishments. She found the best in herself and never failed to pass it on, so that the remembrance of Deb, whether wrestling with Cicero translation or throwing the basketball, will be legendary in the school.

10:05, lights ablaze, Space comfortably tucked in bed, anxiously, desperately awaiting Jinna! In comes the aforesaid, resigned to her fate, and the lights go off. The President of Social Service has arrived! Though this would seem that Jinna herself were the culprit, it is only another instance of her managing Space. She, however, manages it as quietly and efficiently as she manages the choir, social service, and various other offices. She is lovable and sympathetic to everyone and puts her heart and soul into anything she undertakes. Even in a welter of shrieking girls she is dignified, although always enjoying the fun to its utmost. Not only does she command your respect but at the same time she wins your heart with her quiet, humorous smile.

"Oh, I'm so happy!" Kay fairly bubbles over every so often when things become too much for her, and startles us all by bursting out of her usual quiet into a series of squeaks and squeals as she dashes up and down the hall. Although by nature rather reserved and unassuming, she has a dignity all her own which immediately commands respect, and her athletic ability is a blessing to the school. She is a familiar sight in the riding ring—a tiny figure perched on the back of her comparatively enormous horse—and her hurdling in the Rosemary Meet will never be forgotten. Her thorough good sportsmanship, loyalty and absolute unselfishness make her a valuable friend—a fact which every one in Cluett can confirm.

"Something simply screaming has happened!" In rushes Ghita of the matchless red hair, over-flowing with news and excitement. No matter how dull the world may be, Ghita has always some choice bit to impart which gives life zest of a delightful order. Her dignity is the envy of Cluett—would that we all could be so perfect in the art of "D. S." She has tact, sympathy and understanding surpassed by few. Quietly she has made herself a place among the ranks of those who have upheld throughout their years here the true spirit of the school.

ADELINE MOINETTE WATSON

Entered 1926 Smith

EDGARTOWN, MASS.

One of the most exasperating sights to the rest of hard-working Cluett is Moinette, curled up on her bed with an outside-reading book and a Hershey bar, prepared for evening study-hall. This sight becomes more and more mysterious to us as she continues to get through her exams with high honors. As may be seen, Moinette has learned the secret of accomplishment without outward signs of effort, and her impassivity conceals her real diligence and perseverance. Moinette's quietness even extends to her sense of humor which quickly grasps a joke before any one else, and she is always the first to start chuckling, enjoying it to the full. She is an easy person to talk to and is always ready to give her opinions, which are both intuitive and far-seeing, and her cordial manner makes her a most agreeable companion.

SUZANNE FAUCHER WELCH

Entered 1927 Bryn Mawr

1230 Asylum Ave., Hartford, Conn.

It is difficult to give a clear impression of Sue, for she is ever surprising you by her versatility. One moment she can be seen teaching everyone the Varsity Drag and another discussing her latest marks, with the same intent expression. Sue's curly dark brown hair, bright grey eyes and irrepressible vivacity always make her the center of an animated group, for she is a favorite with everyone (especially those who like to borrow her lavender soap). Her proficiency in Indian Clubs is a joy to watch, and she has often been seen carrying off cups as if it were an everyday occurrence. It is certain that her career in life will be interesting, no matter what she chooses to do, since she has a talent for bringing variation to whatever she is engaged in.

"That's as impossible to imagine as Ruth Wood being unkind to anyone," is often heard at Cluett; or as hearing her say anything critical about anyone, we justly add. These two attributes of Ruth's combine to bring her devoted friends and widespread admiration. Her delightful propensity for wandering about the house, composing seconds for songs, has made the half hours before going to bed enjoyable to anyone listening. The habit she has of returning laden with trophies from track meets, hockey games or gym exhibitions has left her completely unassuming, and no one ever feels inferior in her presence, though few of us could rival her. She has made herself indispensable to the school, and in leaving she plunges everyone into despair as they think of next year's sports without her.

PEPER POTION

Mary Swenson Editor of "Sun Rays"

JEAN PARRISH President

Virginia Verry Secretary

The Suns

The Suns pride themselves that they have kept their score nearly equal to the Dials in everything, almost all year; however, we must acknowledge that this was due to three things: the loyal, unselfish co-operation of the Old Suns, the interest and enthusiasm of the new Suns and, greatest of all, the superb inspiration that the Dials' sportsmanship has instilled in us.

The Dials won both spring and fall tennis and the track meet by a marvelous spurt of energy and indomitable spirit that we admire beyond words. We admire, yes, but we are not discouraged at our defeat and we are keenly anticipating another year's competition with the Dials—the best sports we know.

Teresita Dalley Editor of "Timepiece"

Deborah Verry President

Grace Rowe Secretary

The Dials

By means of great effort and enthusiasm, Deb led the Dials to a double victory this year, for they won both the Athletic and the new Academic shield. The points for the shield were based on the actual scoring of the games, so, although the Suns defeated us in three out of five hockey games and won the hockey cup, the score for all games added up to a tie. In Ice Hockey we were badly defeated, but we gained enough points over the Suns in the gym meet to set us ahead again. It was thought that track would decide the winning score, yet it was still so even that the announcing of the shield had to be left until the Sun-Dial matches were well started. With the new system of taking in the Suns and Dials the clubs have been very even and the spirit which is put into competition is growing finer in each club.

The Musical Club

Two concerts were given during the year by pupils not in the Musical Club, and one was given by members of the club in Commencement Week. The Nathan Quartette, playing for us, gave a great deal of enjoyment to the school, as the Tuskegee Singers also did. Madame Koehler, accompanied by Mr. Rovelli, in a concert delighted us, and it is to her that the Musical Club owes the progress that it has made.

The Art Club

This year the Art Club took in four new members whose talent and enthusiasm have contributed largely to the success of the club throughout the year and to the Art Exhibit at Commencement.

We have tried our hands at a variety of crafts—soap-carving, pastels, silhouettes, modeling, wood blocks and oils.

The club hopes that next year's members (with the kind co-operation of Mrs. Kendall) will be able to contribute to the artistic enjoyment of the school far more than we have done.

Social Service

In the past year the Social Service has followed the policy started a few years ago—that of concentrating our resources in order that the community near by might have the benefit of the little we could do. Therefore, we assisted a family that had to move out of its house in a flood and we gave a Christmas Party to some poor school children and their parents. We have also contributed to the sustenance of the George Junior Republic, the Children's Aid Society and the Salvation Army.

The Dramatic Club

Although we lost several of our best girls last year, the three new members we chose from the enthusiastic group who tried out this fall have successfully joined in our work and fun. On March ninth, we presented "The Romantic Age" by A. A. Milne. The cast was comprised solely of "Dramat," but a great part of the work was done by other girls who were helping us. Our coach, Mrs. Doris Holsworth of Windsor, Conn., was simply wonderful in every way. Her patience is indescribable and her forethought for all the last-minute details, amazing. As for Miss Hewitt, we can never sufficiently thank her for the innumerable times she helped and guided us on our way.

ATHLETICS

To Miss Neel

With most sincere thanks for the long, patient hours of help and the ideal of perfect sportsmanship she has given us always

Athletics

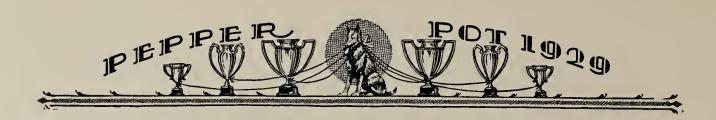

The achievements in athletics this year have been very gratifying in that the school has worked together to develop the best teams possible from the material. The individual members have shown splendid spirit, effort and enthusiasm in upholding the school tradition of sportsmanship.

Both tennis and hockey were well supported during the fall term, which resulted in a successful fall tennis tournament, won by Elizabeth Harding from Lee Pressprich, and an opportunity for many more girls to play hockey was afforded by our excellent new hockey field. Although the Hockey Varsity was defeated in its first game of the season by Rosemary, every player did her utmost, and the next game with Low and Heywood resulted in a tie score. Hockey between the Suns and Dials was of special interest because the final score was a tie. However, the Suns received the cup for winning two out of three games.

Since the weather permitted little Ice Hockey and Skating, our indoor gym work received much attention and time. In the final meet at the end of the term, much progress in Indian Clubs and Apparatus was displayed. Sue Welch won the individual competition, scoring many points for the Suns, but the Dials won the meet.

Track was handicapped at the start of the spring term by unfavorable weather conditions, but because of Miss Neel's untiring efforts the track team was able to achieve an unprecedented success in the Dual meet with Rosemary. Every first place and the relay was won by Walker's, also four new records were established. The closing of the track season was marked by the Dials winning the Sun-Dial meet.

In reviewing the year's athletics the prominent factor is our indebtedness to Miss Neel. Only by her encouragement and confidence in us were we able to achieve success. With her leadership, our school should continue to succeed in its athletic endeavors. The Athletic Board wishes to express its sincerest appreciation for all her assistance.

Class Will

We, the Class of 1929, in full and complete possession of our mental faculties do hereby will and bequeath these, our possessions:—

The training table's appetite to Beaver Brook that, since those who do athletics well seem to have the greatest desire for food, there may be many candidates for next year's teams.

Fay Smith's and Ruth Crossett's perpetual seat in the bus to Ella Milbank and Jerry Swift that they may never be unduly separated.

Grace Rowe's efficiency to Jean Warren.

Polly Raymond's blush to Elizabeth Sawyer that Rosemary may be less terrified.

Eileen McGrath's extemporaneous translations of Virgil to Ruth Potter.

Janet Imbrie's punctuality to Dora Crimmins that the school may be efficiently run.

Ann Matteson's naivety to Milly Meagher.

Ghita Watson's stories of Chicago high life to Nony McNally that her roommates may never lack entertainment.

Betty Schwarz's feet to Henny Wise that she may more lightly trip the stage.

Beulah Parker's curiosity to Harriet Stedman.

Deborah Verry's snores to next year's Space, because it could never live up to its present reputation for noises without some outside assistance.

Katherine Watson's reticence to Margaret Marsh.

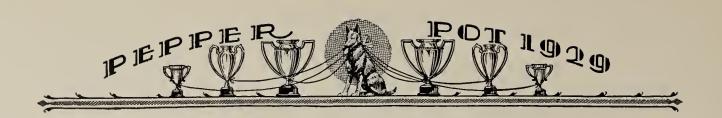

Boots Grassi's giggle to Teresita Dalley that she may at last make a noise in study-hall.

Ruth Crossett's general appearance to Connie Chambers that Cluett may continue to have a homelike appearance.

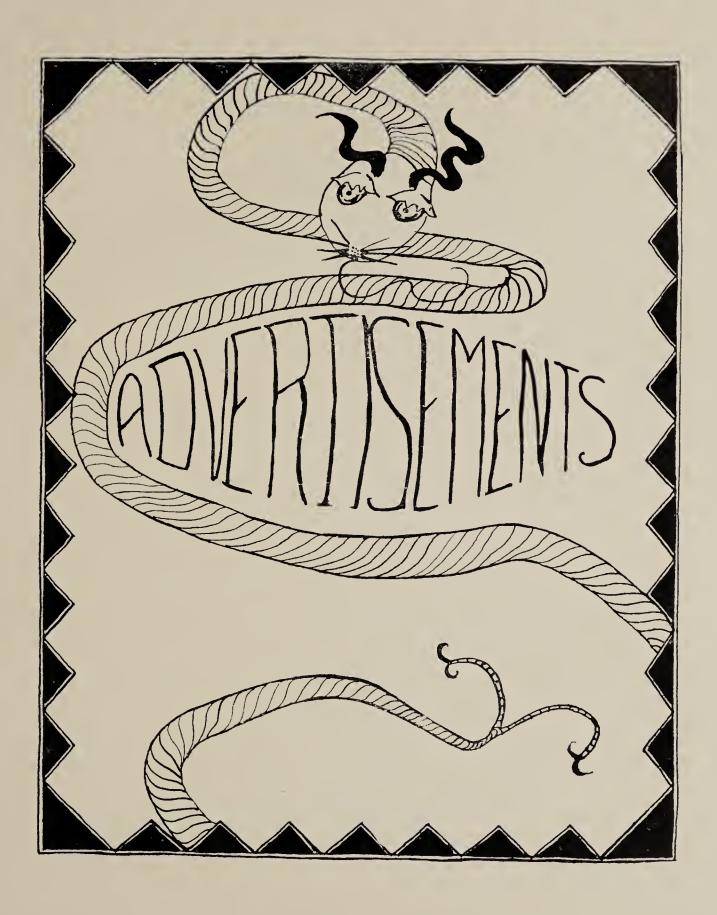

The School Song

Here's to the School we love so well, Here's to our comrades, true, Here's to the many more happy hours, Miss Walker, here with you. Here's to our colors, glorious, United for a while, Here's to the happy days we've spent, Here's to our dear Sun Dial. In days to come we'll scatter far, But let us ne'er forget, A welcome here and friendly cheer Are waiting for us yet. Though clouds may sometimes darkly bend, We'll strive with all our powers, Dear Dial, like thee, in memory, To mark but golden hours. Dear Dial, like thee, in memory, To mark but golden hours.

Miss Walker's Song

Pass the loving cup round,
Pledge the School we hold dear,
Here's to those that have left,
And to all that are here.
And tonight let us vow
And tonight let us rule
That hereafter, as now,
That hereafter, as now,
We will stand by our School.
We will stand by our School.

The Gracious Gift!

HEN the occasion arises for a remembrance that will carry with it the true, sincere feeling that you wish to symbolize, it is then you should ask for our assistance. The rare grace and beauty of the blooms we use—their charming, lasting fragrance and the exact and proper way in which delivery is made, all combine to make "Flowers from Wienhoeber" the most gracious gift of all.

Congratulations

ROBABLY the most gratifying and lasting reward for work well done is the realization of success that has attended one's efforts. Surely, the Staff of the 1929 Pepper Pot must take considerable pride in the successful completion of this excellent book. They have done good work and we heartily congratulate them on the highly pleasing result.

As printers of the 1929 Pepper Pot, we cannot help but feel a certain degree of pride in the fact that this is the ninth successive edition of the Pepper Pot we have had the pleasure of printing—a pride based upon the realization of continued confidence placed in our ability to co-operate with and aid the Year Book Staff.

We hope that this confidence will continue and that it will be our privilege to place the facilities of our organization at the service of each new Pepper Pot Staff for many years to come.
